No!

"No!" Dave's voice was firm.

The heat rushed to David's cheeks as he stared at the finger being waved before his face. They were in the middle of the store and he was being scolded like a child. All for asking a simple question.

Gazing at the floor, David stuffed his hands in his pockets and followed in the wake of his lord and master. Thirty-five, and still being treated as though he was five.

As Dave disappeared along the aisle, David pulled out his hand and flipped him the bird. It made him feel better, if nothing else.
